Well were off to a great start for 2011 we just had our first Virginia hunt and it was great. The first find was found by one of the clubs new members, Allyson Cohen she started it off with a real nice 3 ringer bullet. Steve Ciriaco found a cache of civil war bullets and a part of a tool that the Confederate soldier's used to make bullets, Carter Pennington found a Shield that was hand made by a soldier for personal ID. Carol Ciriaco found a real nice Flying Eagle button, and you could hear her scream of joy from one end of the field to the other. I could go on and on it was

MEMBERS TRY TO HELP FIND WEDDING BAND

Harry and Avery went out on Monday 2/7/11 to try to help this fellow Ryan recover his wedding palladium band, but unlike their success in recovering a wedding ring in Central Park back in December, they came up empty handed this time (except for the .54 cents Avery recovered).

And a nice Thank-you from Ryan and Kate

*Hi Avery,
Thanks again for your and Harry's help with the ring search. Oh well, we tried! Some pictures are attached. Out of curiosity, how often do you end up going on excursions trying to recover a particular item? I'd like to offer to photograph or videotape your next adventure to help promote what you are doing. Let me know if such an opportunity comes up.*

*Best Regards,
Ryan*

PS- My wife Kate says thanks for trying too!

THE REBEL YELL

You've probably heard the of the mythic Rebel Yell. It was real, and it was said to send shivers through the body of the Union soldiers as they faced the onslaught of charging rebels. Many don't know exactly how it sounded, but thanks to a disc jockey from 1935 and modern technology, we now can play the rebel yell and experience what the Union soldiers heard.

During a Confederate reunion in 1935, several of the old veterans from the war whooped up the yell. One radio announcer then asked an old confederate to do it again for a recording. He did. Today, that same recording has been updated for clarity, and the yell has been duplicated for multiple whoops, so it would sound like a whole charge.

At first, it might not sound like much. But when it is done collectively, just close your eyes and imagine being a Union soldier facing this. It does get to you. Imagine being on the front line early in the morning, still dark out, then hearing this...

In one Union diary, the soldier said they heard it far off with no one visible, and they smiled, saying it sounded like school children being let out. Then the wave came at them, the yell grew louder, and the Union took to its heels.
